I bought this book hoping to learn about how to set up a virtual law office. Unfortunately, the book doesn't really address that topic the way I thought it would. I am not eligible to sit for the bar exam in the state I physically reside in, and, unfortunately, life circumstances are such that I cannot relocate for at least a couple of years. I took the bar exam in a different state, and I want to offer my legal services over the internet to clients located across the country. I am aware of other lawyers who have successfully employed such a business model and thought "Law Office on a Laptop" would cover such a situation. However, the book is more about communicating with clients within your own jurisdiction over your computer... which, frankly, all law offices do, "mobile" or not. My expectation was that the book would discuss the ethical concerns and unique considerations of practicing strictly over the internet, particularly offering legal services to clients located in other jurisdictions. The book doesn't even touch on this subject, as it seems to contemplate that you will still physically meet with clients - just at their home or office, rather than at your own office. So, it really did not address the concept of a true virtual law practice. It gives some good basic advice about setting up a business (in general), although some is inaccurate. For instance, an LLC is identified as a corporate structure, which it is not. "LLC" stands for "limited liability company", not "limited liability corporation"; an LLC has members, not shareholders... However, the advice on setting up electronic payment systems and other matters, for example, at least provides a starting point.
